Liberty Is a Moral Monster Sam Dilbeck

One day, in a park not far away, eight friends were roughhousing when a stranger walked nearby them. The leader of the pack stopped the stranger and said they were going to rob him, but the stranger objected. The ruffians offered the stranger a compromise—they'd vote on it. The stranger believed strongly in a democratic system and agreed to abide by the results. Six voted for robbing the stranger, one voted with the stranger, and one abstained. The Cretans won six to two and the stranger was robbed.

After the Philadelphia Constitutional Convention in 1787 concluded, Benjamin Franklin was reportedly asked, "Do we have a Republic or a Monarchy?" Franklin replied, "A Republic, if you can keep it." Franklin wasn't worried about outside forces overthrowing the Republic. He was concerned about it crumbling from within. His words sound ominous as the Republic we inherited unravels. How do you "keep" a Republic founded on democracy of a self-governing people like the United States of America?

Goethe, the 18th century German philosopher poet, said, "What is the best government? That which teaches us to govern ourselves" (Saunders, T.B., The Maxims and Reflections of Goethe, 1893, p. 107). However, this idea was not new; King Solomon wisely said, "Righteousness exalts a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people" (Prov 14:34). The 19th century minister, Henry Ward Beecher, interpreted this as, "There is no liberty to men whose passions are stronger than their religious feelings; there is no liberty to men in whom ignorance predominates over knowledge; there is no liberty to men who know not how to govern themselves" (Drysdale, Wm., Proverbs from Plymouth Pulpit, 1887, p. 72).

For liberty and democracy to be good for humanity, it must be undergirded by morality. Without a righteous foundation, liberty becomes a moral monster. Like the scene in the park, when the majority seeks evil, democracy becomes evil and destroys nations and governments. John Adams rightly observed, “Public virtue cannot exist in a Nation without private Virtue, and public Virtue is the only Foundation of Republics” (Adams in letter to Mercy Otis Warren, April 16, 1776). For America, this means as society leaves its moral foundation of Godly principles behind, it destroys itself.

In the wake of every tragedy, like the recent school shooting in Uvalde, Texas, immorality renews its threat against self-governance. As people have conversations about the shooter, his motive, and future prevention, there are many who ignore the real problem. Was it the availability of guns? Mental illness? Or something else? The United States has spent decades investing in an immorality and is reaping what it has sown.

How long can we tell people they are animals and not expect them to behave like animals? How long can we slaughter pre-born children and not expect people to devalue life? How long can we embrace the cult of self and not expect individuals to think their own good, desires, and thoughts are more important than others? How long can a society embrace narcissism, nihilism, humanism, and materialism, and reasonably expect everyone to seek the community’s good and the welfare of others?

America has worked hard on the priority of the individual and the normalization of immoral behavior. We ignore broken homes and celebrate fatherlessness—the biggest contributing factor to violent crimes. We hypersexualize the culture, leading to more out-of-wedlock births. We sanitize evil and excuse wickedness, pretending they don’t exist. Offenders are mentally ill, misunderstood, or the product of bullying. We have failed to teach people how to cope with disappointment, rejection, or even abuse. And when a product of a corrupt culture lashes out in murder, we act confused, “How could this happen?” It happens because we created a moral monster—liberty without morality.

As America leaves its righteous moorings the looming question is, “Can an immoral America still embrace its foundational liberty?” Armed citizenry and free speech work in a society educated in righteousness with individuals practicing self-control. When we stop personal and social righteousness, the answer to that question is in doubt.

Announcements

Prayers

The Parkers had to cancel their vacation due to Tim's car accident May 17, 2022. The driver who caused the accident turned into oncoming traffic. Tim was treated by EMS on the scene. However, later that evening, he went to the ED for a severe headache and extreme chest pain. Tim was not admitted to the hospital; however, he was in the ED over 10 hours for observation and numerous tests including a CT scan. A heart attack was later ruled out. His chest pain was from the pressure of the deployed air bag. He does have a concussion because his head hit the windshield even though the air bag deployed. Currently, Tim is dealing with head, neck and back pain. Since the accident, he's had emergency services 3 times. Please keep the Parker family in your prayers at this difficult time.

Penny Anderson, Tim Parker's daughter is having a difficult time with seizures since her hospitalization with COVID-19. For a long while her seizures were controlled with medication. Please keep Penny and her husband Dave in your prayers. Thank you.

Chris Welsby is having a back procedure done and prayers for a positive outcome are appreciated.
